You Need To Be Stronger Than Your Weakest Link.

The weakest link in any security model is the time between recognizing an attack and defending against it. Security products based on definitions use a reactive approach and cannot defend themselves against brand new threats. New threats have the advantage of surprise over definition-based products and enter your computer undiscovered. These threats specifically target mass-market security products and shut them off, leaving you unprotected.

To keep threats from targeting our products, itSoftware™ customizes Repelit™ and Scrubit™ to be unique for every company. This action prevents us from being shut off by any attacker. Our behavior-based products use a proactive security approach which does not need definitions to protect you. This allows us to defend you against brand new threats. We recognize the attackers. They don't recognize us. Most importantly, you remain protected at all times.

Now the weakest link in your security model is the time you lose between reading this ad and adding itSoftware security protection to your defenses.

What Products Do You Use for Protection?

Is your idea of protection more of the same thing? Using multiple definition-based security products can still leave your computers vulnerable to threats that elude definitions. Definitions are reactive solutions that cannot protect you from unknown threats.

You need proactive security products that provide both unique and overlapping capabilities. The itSoftware™ Security Suite is designed to complement your existing security model with none of the weaknesses of definition-based solutions. The behavioral protection provided by Repelit™ and Scrubit™ is designed to protect you from the unknown threats that other security products miss.

So when protection really matters, don't be shy. Ask for itSoftware products and say goodbye to your security problems.
